A Pennsylvania native, Natalie L. Bartley moved to Idaho in 1987 to work as an outdoor program manager and has lived there ever since. When she is not working as a freelance writer, she can be found mountain biking, whitewater kayaking, crosscountry skiing, or exploring the outdoors with her yellow Labrador retriever. She has over 500 articles to her credit in publications including Paddler, Canoe and Kayak, Ski Patrol, National Ski Areas Association Journal, Women in the Outdoors, and The Idaho Statesman. Natalie is a certified kayak and ski instructor, and a member of the Outdoor Writers Association of America, the North American Snowsport Journalists Association Western Region, and the Northwest Outdoor Writers Association.

The last refuge of the old bicyclist. Rail trails are great for those of us who can't grind the steep grades anymore. This book has clear directions for finding trail heads and parking Great info for planning our road (trail) cycling adventures. I know it will be one of our tools in putting together our ride "wish list" also. Wish it was available as a smart phone app. I would give it 5:5 stars if it was spiral bound (Personal preference for reference material).

This book has great bike rides on the rails to trails in the northwest.

Good start to finding new paved paths for biking.
