Customer Reviews

Take all the best know, most expensive, impossible to get into restaurants in DC, and you have your top restaurants scoring 28 points. Is that all there is to it? Really? This book is very informative. It's worth getting if you're a foodie and your planning a trip to DC. It seems to list every imaginable restaurant in DC, whether it's good or even so so, but primarily it was greatly lacking in the hidden gems department: small out of the way places with really great food. No surprises. No standouts. DC seems to be no match for San Francisco, or even Las Vegas, when it comes to really good restaurants, so be prepared, regardless of the hype.

This is the typical Zagat guide- updated. It has all the usual information; small but helpful maps, lists of restaurants by special features, such as food type, décor, fireplace, outdoors, views, best buys, etc. There is also a wine vintage chart and a pullout map of the DC region with popular restaurants and chains marked. The book itself is divided into 4 regions; DC, Baltimore, Annapolis and the Eastern shore - which is extremely helpful. As always, the guide is in an easy to carry size, but still extremely readable. I am more familiar with Baltimore, Annapolis area restaurants, but have been to many of the DC ones too. Many of the restaurants listed have an average price of 25 to 35 dollars which is dinner, a drink and tip. The price range is from a low of $10 to a high of $205. Of course at the lower price ones you will probably not feel comfortable in formal clothes or taking your spouse for a special anniversary dinner. With that said, our favorite restaurant for even special occasions is listed at an average cost of $35. You can find whatever price level and style you want from Ben's Chili Bowl in DC and Ann's Dari Creme in Glen Burnie to the Inn at Little Washington at $205. Some of the prices even seem a bit high. I dine at the Mitsitam CafÃ© in the Museum of the American Indian on the Mall (believe me it's the best place to eat on the Mall) and do for less than the listed price of $24. This book as usual contains something for everyone and is great to carry in the car to find just the right place to eat.
